Wait Wait...Don't Tell Me! Famous People Who Returned Our Calls: Celebrity Highlights From The Oddly Informative News Quiz

Synopsis

Celebrity guests are put on the spot in the popular "Not My Job" segment of the Peabody award-winning NPR radio show. Each week, two million listeners tune into Wait Wait . . . Don't Tell Me! to test their knowledge of the week's dumbest news against some of the best and brightest-panelists including author and humorist Roy Blount Jr., author and radio anomaly Tom Bodett, syndicated advice columnist Amy Dickinson ("Ask Amy"), Atlantic Monthly journalist P.J. O'Rourke, Washington Post columnist Roxanne Roberts, and other know-it-alls. Always a high point of the show, "Not My Job" features a celebrity guest who must answer questions on a topic totally outside his or her area of expertise. Guests must also contend with not-so-helpful interjections from host Peter Sagal and the panelists, with hilarious results. Comedians Stephen Colbert (The Colbert Report) and Denis Leary (Rescue Me), actors Leonard Nimoy (Star Trek), Neil Patrick Harris (How I Met Your Mother) and Carrie Fisher, musicians Mavis Staples and Moby, Southern cook and restaurateur Paula Deen, and high-wire artist Philippe Petit (Man on Wire) are just a few of the stars who find themselves under the heat of the Not My Job spotlight.

"A distillation of 12 of the best visits from a very funny crop of celebrity visits. . . . This is one truly enjoyable audiobook." —DWD's Reviews

Coming soon...Coming soon . . .

I have all three of the Wait Wait Don't Tell Me CD's currently available. I put them in the car and the kids and I listen to them. That's a 13 year old, a 16 year old and an over-50 year old. We all enjoy them - not just "enjoy" but laugh out loud. This is a funny funny show. I particularly love it when Paula Poundstone is on the panel, but everyone is hilarious. One segment of the show is called "That's Not My Job". This is where a well-known person is quizzed about something that is NOT in their expertise or does NOT fit their image. So, Phillipe, who was so fearless when walking a tightwire between the two World Trade Centers, is quizzed about phobias that other famous people have had. The premise of the main block of the show is taking real current news items and quizzing the panelists or call-in-listeners about them. As you may guess, the news items selected are not about health care or Afghanistan or other serious topics. They are more likely to ask, for example, why were Jim and Jane Doe caught as they returned to the scene of a crime after they robbed a pet supply store? To make it easier, the contestant is given three multiple choice answers. But you still may not correctly guess that the correct answer is that Jane dropped her pet duck, which they'd taken along on the heist. Wait Wait gives you weekly proof that truth is stranger than fiction. And you're taking the quiz along with the participants, so you have plenty of opportunity to feel informed or smart or without a clue yourself. The kids and I announce our choices out loud and then eagerly wait to see who's right. And remember, nothing is serious, this is comedy. You can catch the show live on Saturdays. Sometimes, I bring up my local NPR radio station's website, which has a LISTEN LIVE feature. That is, you can listen to the real-time broadcast on your computer. Bring up Wait Wait and go about your other business, laughing all the way. Happy Reader wait wait seems fun on radio so i got these cds to enjoy while doing a project -owens

We listened to it on a road trip. Very entertaining as Wait Wait Don't Tell me always is!

These highlights were pretty good and depicted a nice variety of guests. I have been happy to share it with many others.

Great. Wonderful for road trips in the car, and still has a contemporary feel even though some of the interviews are older.

Added to my CD Collection

I just started listening, when I remember, to Wait Wait this year. The shows are usually pretty funny. This is a good sampling of the famous people portion of the program.

Half the fun is listening to the stories but the other half is sharing them with family and friends. This CD will make the drive to work fly.
